Semiotics, also called semiology, the study of signs and sign-using behaviour. It was defined by one of its founders, the Swiss linguist Ferdinand de Saussure, as the study of "the life of signs within society.". Although the word was used in this sense in the 17th century by the English philosopher John Locke, the idea of semiotics as an interdisciplinary field of study emerged only in the late 19th and early 20th centuries with the independent work of Saussure and of the American ...

What is more, semiotics places a strong emphasis on the fact that it is human beings who create the sign functions of human interactions, and that these interactions therefore follow social conventions. This is where semiotics overlaps with theories of discourse. Both can help us understand how meanings are subject to change, and how such change might be not only a matter of time, but also of human effort and of power relations.

Semiotics (also called semiotic studies) is the study of sign processes (), which is any form of activity, conduct, or any process that involves signs, including the production of meaning. A sign is anything that communicates a meaning, that is not the sign itself, to the interpreter of the sign. The meaning can be intentional such as a word uttered with a specific meaning, or unintentional ...
