Today, work is much more horizontal – cutting across silos and extending beyond the organization. Today is a matrix world. But how do we manage people in this world? The answer according to this intensely practical book is not by changing structures, but by changing mindsets and building skills sets. The answer is to develop “matrix managers” – managers who are able to take

Making the Matrix Work - Global Integration

To Summarize -Matrix & "Clarity" Functioning in a matrix demands "clarity," "flexibility" and continual renegotiation of the balance between them. Most organizations define clarity in terms of goals, but most goals aren't as clear as executives like to think. Leaders /Managers torn between two clear but conflicting goals need to handle such trade-offs themselves without taking questions up to the executive level. To reach those self-governing choices, managers need the data ...
